

FRIDAY
FEB
24

2:00 p.m.
Close-Hipp Bldg
Room 401

Being a Daughter of the South Defines Me...and My Research: Honest Storytelling, Transparent Ethnography, and Case Examples from Migrant and Seasonal Farmworker Health

A talk by Shedra "Amy" Snipes,
Associate Professor of Biobehavioral Health
at The Pennsylvania State University

Dr. Snipes will talk about her research on migrant farm work as influenced by her position as a slave-descendant daughter of the American South. Focusing on her positions as a Southern woman, anthropologist, and health behavioralist, she untangles how these interesting perspectives strengthened her ties to health, equity and policies for migrant and seasonal farmworkers.

Co-Sponsored by:
Department of Anthropology
The Walker Institute
Latin American, Caribbean, & US Latinx Studies Program
Department of African American Studies

Southern Studies

College of Arts and Sciences

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA